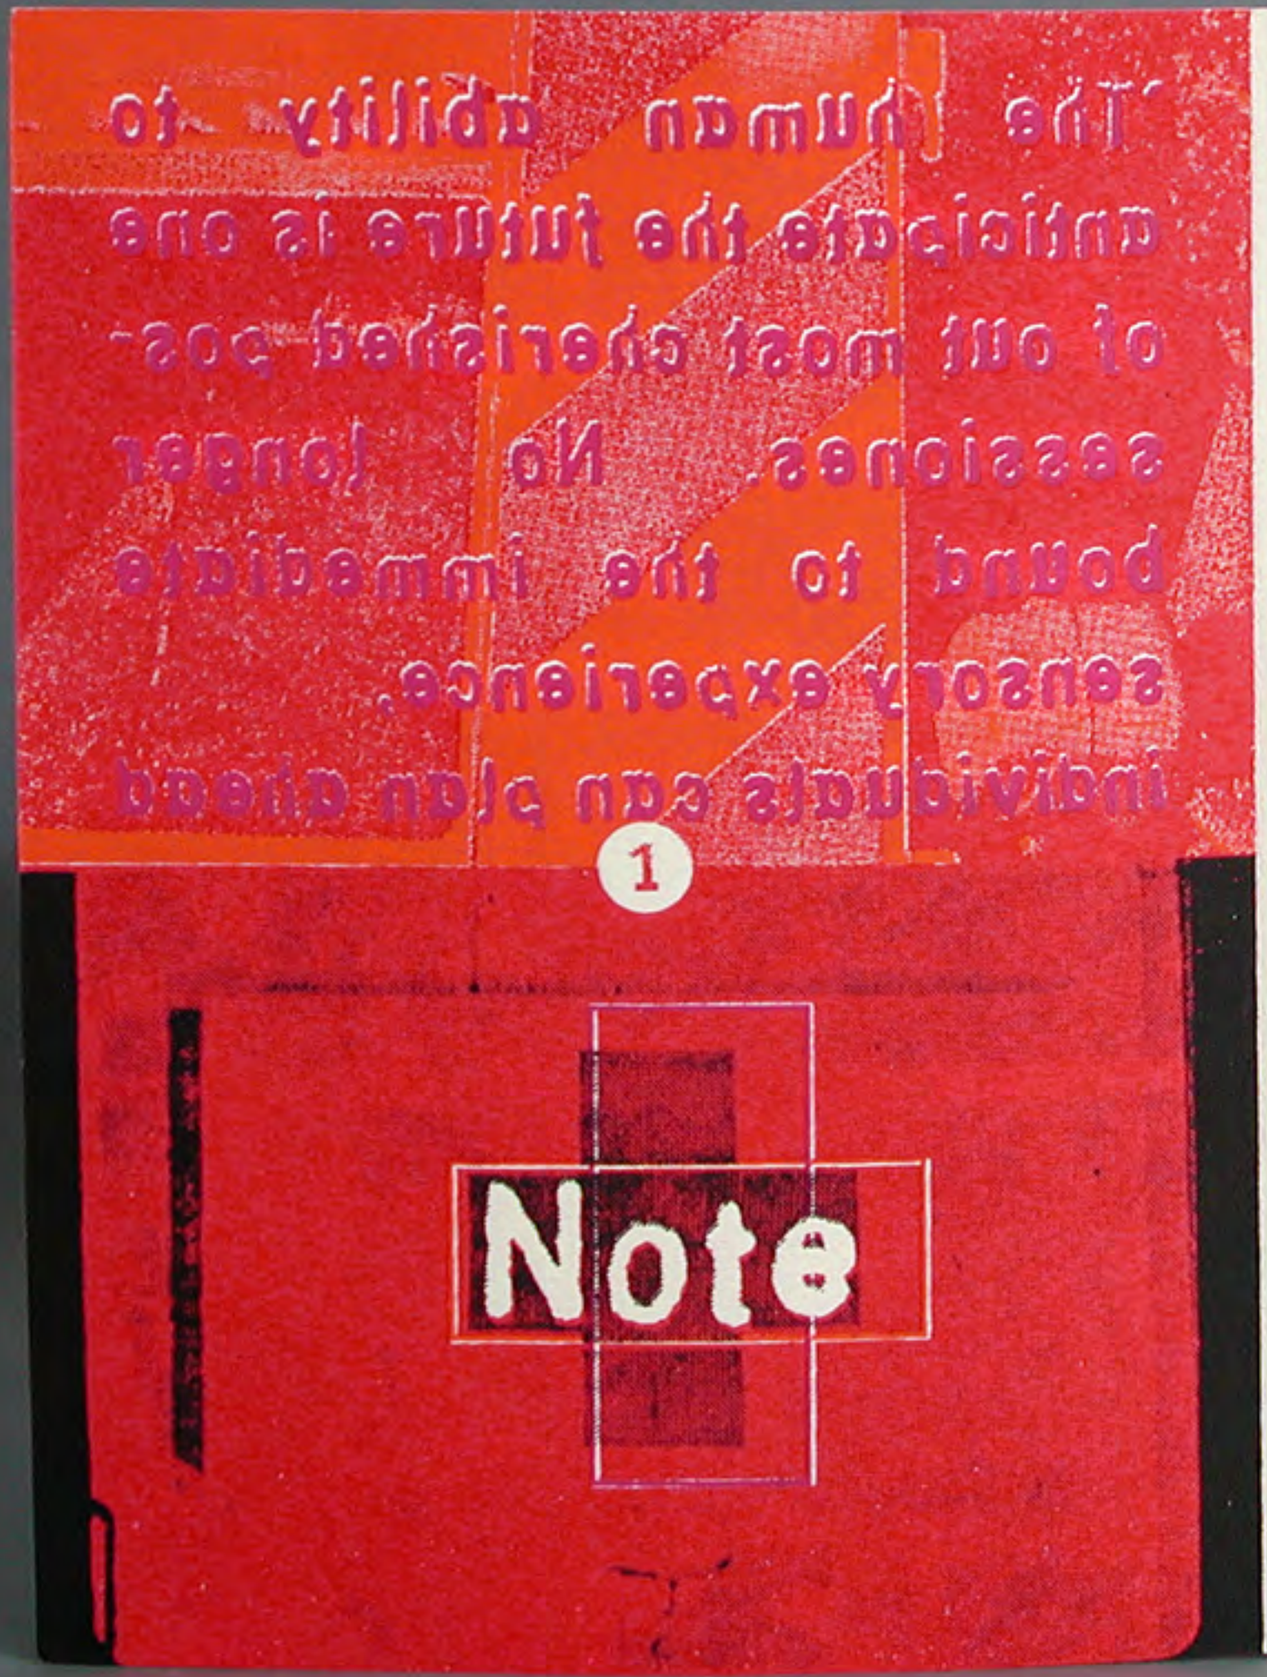
WARNING



`The human ability to anticipate the future is one of out most cherished possessiones. No longer bound to the immediate sensory experience, individuals can plan ahead and prepare themselves for things to come.
Sometimes, if it's in their power, people might even try to use this foresight to turn the course of events to their liking.

②

However, this competence to leap beyound the here and now has its cost. Remote dangers often become part of the present, and by virtue of symbolic representation in thought, we are all masters as well as slaves of future events.

Begin the story in a bar. The need to fall in love. Some things you can feel coming. You don't fall in love because you fall in love; you fall in love because of the need, desperate, to fall in love. When you feel that need, you have to watch your step: like having drunk a philter, that kind that makes you fall in love with the first things you met. It could be a duck-billed platypus.
