Man faces prison for allegedly stealing
$1 soda from McDonald's

April 24, 2012. He's no Hamburglar. But a Florida man faces up to five years in prison after he was arrested on a felony charge of stealing a cup of soda from a McDonald's. The Collier County Sheriff's Department arrested Mark Abaire, 52, last week on a felony theft charge. Authorities say he went into the fast-food restaurant on 14th Street North in Naples, asked for a cup for water and was then seen filling the cup with soda before taking a seat outside the restaurant and sipping the beverage.

The Great Pizza Felony: Three strikes:
25 years for petty theft

March 8, 1995, a 27-year-old Compton warehouse man was sentenced to a prison term of 25 years to life for his third-strike felony offense. His crime: stealing a piece of pepperoni pizza. The impetus for the "three strikes and you're out" law was the desire to rid society of three-time losers. But, regrettably, the law failed to specify who would qualify for this Draconian punishment, leaving the door open for nonviolent petty thieves in addition to hardened, violent criminals.

Walgreens employee fired for 'stealing' chips during diabetic attack

If you're looking for a good place to have a hypoglycemic attack, Walgreens isn't it. In 2008 the company fired Josefina Hernandez for eating a bag of chips when she felt an attack coming on, even though she paid for them as soon as she was able to leave her cashier's post at a San Francisco store. Hernandez had worked for the store for 18 years and had no disciplinary record, but the company said it has a zero-tolerance policy for stealing. Now the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has filed a lawsuit against Walgreens for discriminating against disabled people. While the company says it values its employees, it seems it values a $1.34 bag of chips slightly more.

Does Eating In The Grocery Store
Count As Stealing?

11/04/11. Last week Marcin and Nicole Leszczynski were arrested and charged with fourth-degree theft after forgetting to pay for a chicken salad sandwich at a Safeway. The Associated Press reports that the couple had saved the wrapper to have it scanned at the register, but they forgot to hand it over while they were checking out with $50 worth of groceries. They were stopped at the door and offered to pay, but instead the store called the police and had them arrested. Though the crime was only a misdemeanor and they each posted bail, their daughter was taken by Child Welfare Services, and it took them 18 hours to get her back.

Slain teen's friends not charged for petty theft

October 22, 1999. On the day a man accused of shooting a 17-year-old boy over a stolen plastic pumpkin posted bail and left jail, prosecutors announced they will not file petty theft and trespassing charges against two teens who accompanied the victim. Monday evening's shooting has divided the quiet Buena Park neighborhood where Brandon Ketsdever, a popular student at Kennedy High School in La Palma, was slain.

Alabama cop doesn't arrest woman caught stealing eggs

December 14, 2014 Tarrant, Ala. --

An Alabama woman thought she was going to jail after she was caught stealing eggs to help feed her children and grandchildren, but the police officer who came to the scene surprised her.

Helen Johnson went to buy eggs to feed her five children and grandchildren. They hadn't eaten in two days, and with only $1.25 in her pocket, she was 50 cents short. "My mind must have snapped," Johnson said. "I said (to myself), I'll take three." But a worker caught her. Officer William Stacy told her to park on the side of the parking lot. He ran in, bought the carton of eggs, and handed them to her.

Walmart pressing felony theft charges against worker for eating Oreos

February 21, 2013. Walmart is pressing felony charges against a 63-year-old maintenance worker who ate Oreos and other snacks on the job without paying for them—because she was hungry and couldn't afford them on the $11.40 an hour she was earning after working at various Walmart stores for eight years. According to the police report: Walmart asset protection manager Kenneth Moreno advised that the thefts consisted mostly of food items, such as snacks, deli sandwiches, etc., and that Ms. Penny Winters provided an explanation that she simply did not have the monies to legitimately purchase the food items. Reed, an 18 year old, basketball recruit, had a scholarship to play for Maryland. Last week, Reed tried to steal food from 7-Eleven, got caught, and now his scholarship is gone. Two plainclothes officers working in the store saw Reed putting a Twix ice cream bar into his pants pocket and leaving the store without paying. As the officers tried to arrest Reed, he tried to run away, but the officers grabbed him. A scuffle ensued and police said Reed fought the officers "with his hands" and struck one officer on the left hand. Charged with second-degree assault, second degree assault of a police officer, theft under $100 and resisting arrest, his scholarship was revoked. Cops also found "a four-pack of Reese's Cups" also priced at $2.11 as well as a two-pack of King Sized Reese's Cups worth $1.37." Reed just lost $80k because he tried to take less than $6 worth of snacks.

Theft charge dropped for fruit nibbling

June 7, 1988, Orlando Sentinel -- The state dropped theft charges against a man arrested after a grocery store security guard saw him eating grapes in the store. Arthur Culberth, 55, told the guard he planned to pay at the check-out counter, but store officials said he was stealing. Culberth spent a night in jail for eating part of a $1.65 package of white seedless grapes and was told to appear in court. When Culberth showed up last month to plead not guilty, he learned that prosecutor Sergio Acosta had dropped the charges of petty theft and resisting arrest without violence.

'Mistake in Judgement': Reiner reduces bite for theft of Bologna

July 10, 1987. Angered by the filing of a felony charge against a man accused of stealing a $1.49 package of bologna, Los Angeles County Dist. Atty. Ira Reiner on Thursday ordered a reduction of the charge to a misdemeanor and set an office policy of not filing felony charges against people accused of stealing small amounts of food.

• Theft: November 15, 2014. Lakeland, Florida. Ernesto Cloud, the Polk County Sheriff's Office has charged one of its own with armed burglary in the theft of a $10 DVD at convenience store where the Sheriff was responding to assist after a burglary. "This behavior is atrocious and will not be tolerated by our agency," said Sheriff Grady Judd. "We are all disgusted by his behavior and he is now in jail where he belongs. Ernesto McCloud said it best himself -- he threw away a career for a $10 DVD."
